WILD ANIMALS I HAVE KNOWN.

THE ORANG-OUTANG.

Surely you can't have traveled much in street cars if you haven't come across the "Very-Rank-Cigar-Stump Orang-Outang." As a rule, this animal's cigar is the merest remnant of a stump, yet he holds on to it with a tenacity worthy of a better cause and a better cigar. His neighbors suffer visibly from the evil smell of it, but nothing will make him throw it away. He will usually stay in that car to the end of its run, besides.

WILD ANIMALS I HAVE KNOWN

(Copyright 1904, by W. R. Hearst.)

Here you have the "I'll-Do-All-the-Talking-Myself Parrot," a specialty found in practically all parts of the city. Clubs, hotels, lobbies, studios, sitting rooms, are its favorite resorts, nor does it draw the line against the parks and street corners, though the policemen may draw that line for it. This animal is not dangerous, but it is wearing on the nerves; however, it has been known to cure many aggravated cases.

WILD ANIMALS I HAVE KNOWN

(Copyright, 1904, by W. R. Hearst.)

THE KILL-TIME RHINOCEROS.

WILD ANIMALS I HAVE KNOWN

(Copyright, 1904, by W. R. Hearst.)

THE LUNCH-COUNTER OSTRICH.

WILD ANIMALS I HAVE KNOWN

(Copyright, 1904, by W. R. Hearst.)

This is the high-heel, long-train, pompadoured goose. She may be seen on any street at any time of the day, unfortunately. The creature is a source of danger to herself and the community. Her specialty lies in the art of gathering microbes in the binding of her gown and disseminating them for general use. The H. H. L. T. and P. G. is probably the vainest and the most thoughtless animal on record.